HO-267 WILDWOOD Simpsonville Private

early seventeen and eighteen hundreds

Wildwood, the Dower House for Worthington's Quarters was originally a four bay wide, one room deep two story structure with a hyphen attaching it to an early log house kitchen which may very well have been the building which held the original grant. A brick chimney lay in the south wall separating the living and dining rooms and another on the south wall of the original log house kitchen, two bays wide and one room deep. The building faces east with an entrance in the north bay of the main structure. Sensitive additions have been made which enhance this lovely landmark; a second story gable roof has replaced a previous shed roof which lay over the original hyphen connected to the log kitchen and a two bay wide, one room deep, two story frame north wing has been added along the north wall of the main house. Both additions give a continuity to the gable roof line of the original structure, all of which run north—south, while their scale and proportions add to rather than detract from the integrity of the original structures, now so successfully blending together as one unit.

The log house kitchen is believed to have been the first structure built on the tract Worthington's Addition, patented in 1710. On October 13, 1858 William Worthington sold Wildwood, a tract of 316 acres to Mr. & Mrs. Richard Diggs. This was the first time the property passed out of the Worthington family.
